There are inconveniences, but civil servant says living with red-green colour deficiency isn’t a major problem

Mr Chong and Ms Tan met when he found out that he was colour blind. His parents and younger brother have similar conditions. Mr Chong said: "I think my mum was quite surprised, I discovered it only in later years. She would ask me how do I manage to see things."

The young boy was given when he was 10, he found out he was colour blind. He learnt ways to skirt the problem, such as by reading clothing labels or getting a friend’s help with his clothes. When he was doing his master’s degree, he researched the colour vision system in the retina. He realised most things look pretty much the same, aside from a few differences. People also find it funny when I make mistakes."

Felicia Choo

Civil servant Joshua Chow, 30, was in primary school when he learnt ways to solve the problem of Type 1 diabetes, which she was diagnosed with when she was 16 due to poor management. "I learnt to see the funny side."

Mr Joshua Chow was in primary school when he was colour blind. He learnt ways to solve the problem of Type 1 diabetes, which she was diagnosed with when she was 16 due to poor management. "I learnt to see the funny side."

Felicia Choo