Singapore is planning a major shift in the area of animal welfare and food safety. Currently, both these areas fall under the purview of the Agri-Food and Veterinary Authority (AVA), which is already very stretched and under the Ministry of the Environment and Water Resources. And yesterday’s announcement means the area is likely to be another way to ensure the well-being of the other creatures in Singapore’s nature areas too.

Already, Singapore has seen growing numbers of animals – from insects to creatures in the country’s green spaces – report to AVA.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach.

Wild boars, chameleons or long-tailed macaques are just some animals that are found beyond the confines of nature areas, sometimes clashing with humans and prompting questions over whether they should be protected or culling.

As Mr Louis Ng, an MP for Nee Soon GRC and an animal welfare advocate, even though it may be a part of the animal’s natural life, but it should be done in a controlled approach. 