One of the more prominent cases of benchmarking for private sector specialists was surgeon Susan Lin's bill for seven months of cancer treatment in 2007 for a member of the Bruneian royalty, totalling $24.8 million.

The surgical procedures which have been benchmarked cover more than 85 per cent of cases involving surgery and 75 per cent of cases involving procedures performed on Singaporeans in the private sector last year.

Generally, the lower end of the fees is associated with less complex cases, while the higher end associated with more complex ones.

When determining the guidelines, the committee looked at what was charged for surgery performed on Singaporeans in the private sector last year, and also incorporated SMA's 2006 fee guidelines and inflation.

The committee consulted about anti-competitive lines other charges such as consultation fees, as well as regulators, insurers, the National Trades Union Congress and the Consumers Association of Singapore, among other stakeholders.

Since 2013, MOH has published information on the total hospital bills for the website and, in 2016, also incorporated SMA's fee guidelines and inflation.

The Senior Minister of State for Health and Transport, Dr Lam Pin Min, told the media on Monday that it will probably take the committee between three and five years to consider including in the guidelines changes such as consideration of unanticipated fees.
